

Your local rural chaplains and Salvation Army officers

The Salvation Army is called on to help over 91,000 people every year, providing support in the midst of an emergency. Our network of rural chaplains and officers support people and communities in regional and remote areas across Australia. We work alongside other rural support agencies, participate in community engagement activities, and conduct regular visits to farmers and rural workers in need of practical assistance, or simply provide a listening ear and the hand of friendship.

Rural chaplains and officers may also provide services such as:

- Emergency financial assistance
- Delivery of donated goods and food hampers
- Emotional and spiritual support and a listening ear
- Advocacy and pastoral care
- Personal support through illness
- Support through grief and loss
- Support during legal proceedings

Their help is critical on the frontline of an emergency, when people are impacted by tragedy out of their control.
